

Easter 7, Year C

John 17:20-26

(After the Last Supper, Jesus prayed for his disciples. He then spoke to his Heavenly Father): “My prayer is not for them alone. I pray also for those who will believe in me through their message, that all of them may be one, Father, just as you are in me and I am in you. May they also be in us so that the world may believe that you have sent me. I have given them the glory that you gave me, that they may be one as we are one: I in them and you in me. May they be brought to complete unity to let the world know that you sent me and have loved them even as you have loved me. “Father, I want those you have given me to be with me where I am, and to see my glory, the glory you have given me because you loved me before the creation of the world. “Righteous Father, though the world does not know you, I know you, and they know that you have sent me. I have made you known to them, and will continue to make you known in order that the love you have for me may be in them and that I myself may be in them.”

I ran across a news story a few days ago about a tow truck driver who was called to the scene of an accident on an Interstate Highway in order to tow a wrecked car. The tow truck driver started to hook up the car to his truck when he saw a bumper sticker on the car for one of the presidential candidates – a candidate whom he was not fond of. He immediately unhooked the car and told the owner of the car that he could not tow her car because she supported this particular candidate. The tow truck driver, who claims he is a Christian, said, “Something came over me, I think the Lord came to me, and He just said, ‘Get in the truck and leave.’ And when I got in my truck, you know, I was so proud, because I felt like I finally drew a line in the sand and stood up for what I believed.” *

Now, I don't mention this news article in order to cast aspersions on one tow truck driver, but rather because I think it is so easy for any one of us to fall into the same mistake: confusing our strongly held opinions with the Christian faith. I have no doubt that the tow truck driver, if he is truly a Christian, had at one point heard Jesus' parable of the Good Samaritan, where – rather than being injured in a car wreck – a Jewish man is beaten and left “half dead” along the road. In the parable, it is not any of the Jewish man's fellow Jews who stop to help (a priest and a Levite both pass him by), but rather the one who stops to help, who shows compassion, is a Samaritan, an enemy of the Jews. I also have no doubt that the tow truck driver had, at some time in his Bible reading, come across the passages where Jesus says, “Love your enemies, do good to those who hate you... bless those who curse you, pray for those who abuse you.” (Luke 6:27-28) “...so that you may be children of your Father in heaven...” (Matt. 5:44-45)

And then there is today's Gospel passage. The setting is the Upper Room, immediately following the Last Supper and Jesus' washing of his disciples' feet – two acts of intimate community which Jesus shares even with Judas, whom he knows will soon betray him. Jesus is nearing the end of his long farewell address on this night before his death, and he concludes with an extended prayer – for himself, for his disciples, and – in today’s passage – for us. “Heavenly Father,” Jesus prays, “I ask not only on behalf of these [disciples of mine], but also on behalf of those who will believe in me through their word...”

That’s you and I, my friends. We are the ones who believe in Christ through the word of his followers, most notably in the writings of the New Testament. On the night before he died, Jesus was praying for us, for you and me, and for all of his followers who are alive today, here and now. So let’s listen again to Jesus’ prayer, this time being aware that when Jesus says “they” he means you and I, and all of his followers alive today. And think particularly, for a moment, that Jesus is speaking to our current situation in the United States.

“I pray, Father,” Jesus says, “that they [all of us followers of Jesus in America] may all be one. As you, Father, are in me and I am in you, may they also be in us, so that the world may believe that you have sent me. The glory that you have given me I have given them, so that they [we followers of Jesus in America today] may be one, as we are one, I in them and you in me, that they may become completely one, so that the world may know that you have sent me and have loved them even as you have loved me.” (John 17:21-23)

My friends, I cannot reconcile these words of Jesus with the message that the tow truck driver believes he heard from Jesus – to drive away and not help that woman, because he disagreed with her politics. If Jesus could wash Judas’ feet knowing that just moments later Judas would betray him, couldn’t the driver tow this woman’s car? And I believe the tow truck driver is but one example of a much wider divisiveness rampant in America today, the reverberations of which, if we are honest with ourselves, affect the souls of each one of us, drawing us – most often without our conscious awareness – into the spirit of divisiveness and polarization at large in our world.

Last week I quoted A.W. Tozer, who said, “Unity in Christ is not something to be achieved; it is something to be recognized.” In other words, the fundamental reality of our being members of the Body of Christ is that we are one Body, and the eye cannot say to the hand, “I do not need you.” (1 Cor. 12:21) Our foundational unity doesn’t mean uniformity, however; an eye is not a hand or a foot or an ear. We are different, we hold different beliefs, different opinions; but that does not mean we are not all members of the Body of Christ. My mother and father disagreed on several things, but that didn’t compromise their marriage. Democratic strategist James Carville and Republican strategist Mary Matalin fell in love and got married. We members of Christ Church disagree with one another on certain matters, but that doesn’t compromise our unity as the Body of Christ in this place. Yet one of the sad legacies of the Protestant Reformation, I’m afraid, is that a large part of American society – including many Christians – has been led to think that our differing beliefs trump our foundational unity.

On the same day I read the article about the tow truck driver, I ran across a quote from the science fiction writer Robert Heinlein, who said: “You can sway a thousand men by appealing to their prejudices quicker than you can convince one man by logic.” Which made me remember something that Richard Rohr had said some 20 or 30 years ago (and I quote as I remember): “The quickest way to form community is by bonding together against a common enemy.” The resulting community, however, is not a godly community, for no community formed around opposition or dislike is of Christ.

Where did this propensity to form community around a common enemy come from? Perhaps it evolved as a means for members of primitive tribes to survive against those forces – animal or human – which threatened their safety. But we must be keenly aware that while this predisposition toward “being against” may have evolved by natural selection as a primitive means of protection in the wild, that does not mean that God wants you and I to give free reign to these primitive, oppositional, often violent tendencies. For while it may feel right (the tow truck driver felt great for having “drawn a line in the sand,” and voters respond enthusiastically to negative campaigning) - though opposition, polarization, and attack may feel right at the moment, feeling right does not necessarily mean that it is of God. I think that’s where the tow truck driver – and so many of us! – miss the mark: equating a “right feeling” with God’s approval. We must be constantly trying to discern the source of our feelings, attitudes, convictions, and motivations: are they coming from that primitive, “reptilian” part of our brains, or are they coming from the indwelling Spirit of Christ? It is so easy to make the serious mistake of equating the two – when in reality, they could not be more different. The reptilian response emanates from a place of fear, while the response of Christ emanates from love of our enemies. “Perfect love casts out fear” John reminds us in his First Letter. (1 John 4:18)

In the Catechism at the back of our Prayer Book, we read: “What is the mission of the Church? Answer: The mission of the Church is to restore all people to unity with God and each other in Christ.” (p. 855) My friends, at this time in our history, I believe we who follow Jesus are being strongly called to witness in our lives to this foundational unity, which is so different from the polarizing, oppositional, reptilian spirit which seems to have gained sway among so many of us in our world today. You and I are being called to hold in mind the image of Jesus sharing an intimate meal with Judas, and washing Judas’ feet. We are being called to remember the story of the Good Samaritan, in which Jesus clearly makes the point that love and compassion are far more important than ethnic, religious, and political differences. We are called to remember the words of Jesus: “Love your enemies, do good to those who hate you... bless those who curse you, pray for those who abuse you.” (Luke 6:27-28) “...so that you may be children of your Father in heaven...” (Matt. 5:44-45) We are being called to remember the words of Jesus from a few Sundays ago: “By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another.” (John 13:35) (Jesus never said, “By this everyone will know that you are my disciples, if you draw a line in the sand...”) Finally, we are being called to remember that in his farewell address, his last will and testament, Jesus’ greatest concern – what he prayed for fervently and repeatedly – was for unity between all his followers, himself, and God.

My friends, if we can truly remember these things, and live accordingly, we can help turn the tide from a rampant oppositional, divisive spirit in our world today toward a spirit of love and unity – and the farewell prayer of Christ will have come closer to being answered.

AMEN
